

Sara Johnsen

The award-winning Norwegian director Sara Johnsen is one of Scandinavia's most distinguished directors and writers. In addition to penning and directing TV-series and feature films, Johnsen is the author of two novels: White Man, and He Knows Something She Can Try.

Johnsen's acclaimed short film Houdini's Hound (2003) became an instant international hit, showing at festivals all over the world and winning 'Best Short Film' at Berlin International Film Festival and Almería International Short Film Festival among others. Her first feature film, Kissed by Winter (2005), received fantastic reviews and became Norway's submission to the Academy Awards. It was also the winner of the Grand Jury Prize at AFI Fest and nominated for the prestigious Nordic Council Film Prize.

The year 2009 saw the release of Johnsen's second feature, Upperdog, which was received with great acclamation and became a box office success. Upperdog was presented with the Norwegian Film Critics Award and became a huge success at that year's Amanda Awards, taking home the awards for 'Best Film', 'Best Direction', 'Best Actress', and 'Best Cinematography'.

Her film All That Matters Is Past (2012) had its premiere at the Toronto Film Festival and was nominated for 'Best Nordic Film' at the Gothenburg Film Festival. Johnsen's latest feature, Framing Mom (2017) gained great attention for its excellent direction and leading actress, Ruby Dagnall, who was awarded 'Best Actress' at the Amanda Awards.

Johnsen is creator and writer of 22 July, a series about the everyday heroes who took action following the terror attack in Norway on July 22nd, 2011. 22 July premiered in January 2020 and has been lauded in the Norwegian and international press. Johnsen also emerged as the winner of the 2020 Nordic TV Drama Screenplay Award for 22 July.

Currently, Johnsen is writing the TV series 'Faithless,' based on Ingmar Bergmans drama of the same name.
